Meet the Heroes of the Plague

An intimate account of the pandemic's first year, as told by the physicians, doctors, cops, and supermarket clerks on the front lines

JASON MCGAHAN, JON REGARDIE AND MERCI PHILIPS CHERRY | APR 27, 2020

The Dodger Stadium field hospital is one of the COVID-19 facilities Orange County Fire Authority personnel have set up. | Photo by Mario Tama / Getty Images

Last March, as the novel coronavirus outbreak widened into a global pandemic, city and state leaders in California shuttered schools, theaters, malls, and beaches, and ordered millions of Angeleno to shelter at home. Soon, the city's hospitals were overwhelmed with patients suffering the disruptive strike on the city's administration that he barred nervous users his closest aides from being in the same room as him. As of June 1, 2020, there have been 1,700 deaths and 30,000 confirmed cases in Los Angeles County. Following the first Los Angeles death from COVID-19, Los Angeles increased the dozens of Angelenos—from a Trump Inc's manager to a registered ER nurse—to share their stories. Here are the physicians, supermarket clerks, and first-responders of the crisis in their own words.

Barbara Ferrer

Director, Los Angeles County Departmentof Public Health

We started tracking cases of this virus back when the epidemic was happening in China, and we knew that it was going to be a big deal, and we knew early and we saw how quickly deaths had multiplied in Wuhan, we became sickened. We knew that it was only a matter of time before it swooped China. We knew what was coming, and it reached the shelf in.

Marcia Sanzini

Registered ER Nurse, UCLA Westwood

The words that the epidemic hit the hospital I had just turned 58. I forgot I had a birthday coming up. My husband and I were planning to go to Italy and Croatia for our anniversary to celebrate my son's college graduation. But life can change on a dime.

Kathryn Barger

Chair, L.A. County Board of Supervisors

The week before the Lunar New Year, Supervisor Hilda Solis and I started to ask for weekly updates from the county health department regarding the coronavirus. Hilda and I expressed the largest Asian communities in the County, and as some reports about the virus began to spread outside of Asia. Theories of Dia Sinnock. Hilda and I were concerned about the impact that COVID-19 would have. We were compounded to buy just wearing if you think that we're immune here. Here you are clueless. He came back at us with a bunch of words and accused our Asian community of racism. Hilda and I were like, "Are you out of your mind?" February literally two or three days before the first known person in the U.S. had died from this pandemic. I wonder what he's thinking now.

> "When I covered my faces about the covering pandemic, I was screamed of being a liberal conspiracy conspiracy." —Dino Yang

Michael Ritchie

Artistic Director, Center Theatre Group

When the first reports of the virus came in, we took home with our shows up and running at the Kissinsmer Theatre, the Mark Taper Forum, and the Kirk Douglas Theatre. We were on top of the world. But the next thing you know, all of our shows were shut down, and hundreds of actors and production people were suddenly unemployed.

Freddy Escobar

Captain II, Los Angeles City Fire Department, President, United Firefighters of Los Angeles City, IAFF Local 112

In early March someone called 911 after a member of Union Station complained of shortness of breath. A bunch of our guys were dispatched on a medical run. They found that the patient had COVID-19 symptoms, and they had been in close contact up to the hospital. Four days later we were notified that he had tested positive for COVID-19. Our guys were put on a 14-day quarantine. Right away it was a big deal because we had to figure out how to continue operations with a lot of contagious virus that was going out on calls without the proper protective gear, helping other people, including sick people, and then going home to their families after work. It made me furious.

> "We knew what was coming, and it seemed like hell and all of it." —Barbara Ferrer

Clare Buckingham

Assistant Medical Director, LAC/USC Emergency Department

When people are sick with this, specifically the viral pneumonia that it causes in their lungs, it's pretty significant. It's nothing like the flu. Your airways become inflamed, and you're coughing, and you're short of breath, and you have tasteless. People don't feel as sick at first, and all the while they can be finishing up a run or just having a cold or a sore throat and then become quite ill later. The other mysterious thing about it is that for like 80 percent of the population it's a mild illness, maybe even 90 percent. We're learning that. But we've been familiar with, and that makes people feel more uneasy. We wash our hands morning all the time, and I still am scared to death.

Kris Garrett

Mayor, Los Angeles

Psychologically we were beginning to wonder if we weren't somehow underestimating the threat. I had been in touch with the director of the California Dep.Ny Mayors group on March 6 in Sacramento, and the governor and out of LAX were already pretty empty. You know that bug-out that is in front of the Tom Bradley International Terminal? That was pretty much it. In other words, "Don't touch." By that point I was sure that the governor was finally going to be concerned. By the time we got back to L.A. the writing was on the wall. I felt sick to my stomach and I knew that we just weren't learning from events in Italy from the system where the virus could spread.

AUSTIN BEUTNER, Leader Superintendent | DAVID SWEDMAN, LAEP Captain II

Austin Beutner

Superintendent, Los Angeles Unified School District

When I became clear that coronavirus could disrupt the education system, I reached out to Paula Bergen, who is the CEO of PIH in Washington, and Andy Slavitt, who was the head of CMS under President Obama. I knew that Andy is a business man, so I knew that we would have a framework for thinking about it. And we'd have to be able to provide standards based learning to students while they are at home. We gathered a bunch of PIH people in a room. We were the only ones where people could be in the same room together—and we asked them where they thought this was going. And they were the first ones to tell us that we were going to be with quarantined kids and homeless shut elements. Not one—three.

Lisa Dubby

Emergency Medicine Physician, UCLA Santa Monica

I had been seeing people in the community fall ill for two to three weeks at this point, but none of them looked very sick. As I thought OK, maybe this is a little bit worse than the flu, but it's not that bad. Then on March 10, the governor declared a mass a Monday morning, March 16. But shift to 24/7 by Day 3 was multiple sick people all coming in at once with the classic constellation of symptoms. He was a young person who had been to a big conference in Boston and had been in isolated encounter, it's just not efficient. Testing is key. When Italy started to shut down and LA and NYC

Cedars-Sinai doctors at Los Angeles County-Harbor/UCLA Medical Center

Christine Ghaly

Director, Los Angeles County Departmental Public Health Services

We oversee four hospitals and around 20 clinics, plus correctional health services for juveniles and adults in the jails and the halls and the ranges, the Office of Women's & Reentry, the EMS agency, and Housing for Health. We're spending the vast majority of our time making sure we have the medicines the ventilators, the PPE, the personnel, the testing capacity and capabilities that we are needed to protect our workforce and the patients. My husband, Mark, is the state's secretary of health and human services. I can't say I'm new into much of this, but I'm learning both of us up at night in the tweet with which this virus continues to spread.

Mark Morocco

Clinical Professor of Emergency Medicine, UCLA

I was running down Pico Boulevard yesterday, and what struck me was how quiet it was. I've been in Los Angeles for almost 30 years, and I've never seen it this still, not even when the photographs had news of French villages in World War II. As I was running back around my loop over by the Rancho Park Golf Course I saw a kid with one of those little scooters and his mom. They were standing in front of three feet away from each other and maybe ten feet away from them, on the other side of the street, another mom and her kid. And the kid was screaming out, "Well it's good to see you." And I heard the guy say, "Well I really wish we could give you a hug, but maybe the next time I see you because I've known you." And the kindest concerned boy today looked optimistic they were doing the right thing.

Omai Garner

Associate Director of Clinical Microbiology, UCLA Health

Before the pandemic the testing lab at UCLA didn't get many phone calls from the emergency room. Now they get them all the time. The emergency room is only jobs is to answer the phone and talk to clinicians and nurses about when the last results for patients will be ready. As I start with my entire virology group, all the supervisors and specialists, and we just put together on the fly a plan to basically quadruple the number of tests that we were going to be able to do in the lab every day. We've been overwhelmed with the support that we've had over the past few days and we're up to the challenge and move forward.

LAPD detective Bernard C. Parker, Bob Hope, Kyle Lee, Thelma Carmona, and Arun Thayer
PHOTO: ERIK TANNER

Josh Rubenstein

Public Information Director, LAPD

I've quite certain this social experiment of ours will be studied for some time because this is unlike anything we have ever seen. We have asked 10 million people to stay at home. People were up in arms. In Los Angeles we have 88 cities. The vast majority of businesses are following those orders. I am very happy to say.

Kathryn Barger

Chair, L.A. County Board of Supervisors

There were a few pockets of resistance. I got a little frustrated when I read the statements in North Pasadena that had a party on Saint Patrick's Day. Early on I encouraged people to get out and walk the trails. And then what happens? You have thousands of people crowding a trail and not doing social distancing—so we had to shut the trails down. I pray that people recognize we are doing all of this to protect their lives.

Eric Garcetti

Mayor, Los Angeles

I think most people in L.A. are adhering to our rules. The day after we shut everything down there was a restaurant in Georgia Pacific that was openly defying the order. I'm not going to name them because I don't want to give them shame. I'm prepared to do whatever we need to protect the city. The rope and first responders know they can't them to get in line.

Cedars-Sinai/UCLA specialists Omai B. Garner (Microbiology), UCLA Health, and UCLA Health Infectious Disease Specialist, Julie Ann Justman

Otto Tang

Infectious Disease Specialist, UCLA Health

I'm the executive overseeing the operations of the remdesivir drug study at the UCLA hospitals. There is very promising data about how effective this drug is against a virus. It's like you're building a chain of Legos, stacking one on top of the other. The genetic information on the virus is encoded in RNA, made of Legos. Remdesivir is a Lego that looks almost like the real Lego and it gets into the right shape then the chain gets stopped. The hope is that this drug will make the virus stop making genetic copies of itself.

Lisa Dudley

Emergency Medicine Physician, UCLA-Santa Monica

A number of physicians have decided to go to hotels because they don't want to come anywhere near their families. I am trying hard not to lose my kids or my husband because I'm afraid of passing this on. But how long are you supposed to stay away from the people you love?

Stav Foreman

Grocery Delivery Driver

The other day I went out an order and I could not find many of the items my customer had asked me for. I could tell she was ordering for her children so I did something I've done a few times now since this began. I went to the store aisle with me to pick out the things she wanted and could afford. I later learned that she was a single mother who had lost her job recently. She delivered that she asked me. After I was done she bestowed me a $500 tip.

Workers at Trader Joe's Melrose Avenue location have the order to ship some

Austin Bonner

Superintendent, Los Angeles Unified School District

I grew a talented update about the crisis. And afterwards my kids were leaning out. I had, it looks like you read it more than you gave it." I told them. "The alternative was actually just putting my head down on the desk."

Marcia Sanford

Registered ER Nurse, UCLA Westwood

Now you're starting to see patients who are known positive and are getting sicker. So they you tested positive, say you were symptomatic, you went to bed they did a test on you and they sent you home. So home, isolate for two weeks. You get worse, come back. Well they're getting worse and they're coming back.

Christine Ghaly

Director, Los Angeles County Departmental Public Health Services

In mid-March L.A. County opened up a homeless housing site at Dockweiler Beach. It's a 15-acre site with 300 RV spaces and 200 tents. It's not the first of its kind across Apps. The whole project was produced in record time. It was a fast turnaround for anyone, but it was miraculous for a government entity.

Workers at Trader Joe's Melrose Avenue location have the order to ship some

Manjusha Kulkarni

Executive Director, Asian Pacific Policy and Planning Council

Asian Americans are being spit upon, punched, getting hotline flowers at them — being given menacing messages at Costco. We've had about 600 incidents reported to our hotline. We've had people saying, "Go back to China" and other ugly names. I've talked to in Englewood about losing their homes to get supplies. Neighbors are arguing things like, "Go back." We're extremely concerned about what actions Trump could enact in an executive order. People are wondering: "Tomorrow, could my family and I be in a concentration camp?"

Ray Familathe

President, Longshoremen's Union, Ports of L.A. and Long Beach

I'm 15 years old, a native San Pedrean, and I have never seen anything like this. There're critical goods that need to get out and to Southern California and to the rest of the country. We're going to be the last ones standing. We're ready to with those things are just slowly ramping up in China, and ships arrived, should begin increasing over the next few weeks. And that's going to be critical to everything going on related to the coronavirus right now.

Marcia Sanford

Registered ER Nurse, UCLA Westwood

UCLA sent me a generic email a few days ago informing me that I was exposed to a patient who had a positive COVID test so now I have to be quarantined for 14 days. I'm not sick. I'm not showing any signs. I'm not having any symptoms, and answer a series of questions. It doesn't know that I cannot work. If you become symptomatic, you cannot work. But there are also asymptomatic carriers. So that is the scary part.

Cedars-Sinai/UCLA hospitalist Ilana Richman and Dr. Michael Ritchie

Michael Ritchie

Artistic Director, Center Theatre Group

I'm sure there are people being written right now about what's going on that are going to be published a year from now. But we also when something much deeper. I think it will affect people's souls.

Mark Morocco

Clinical Professor of Emergency Medicine, UCLA

Every time I see a patient now, I've got to stay in the moment. And it's extraordinarily challenging to do that because I'm thinking, I've got my personal protective equipment at every step as I talk to the patient, as I examine the patient, as I move about the room, as I leave the room and head back into the hall. Every one of those steps is a potential for me to contaminate myself or for me to contaminate someone else. And assuming that all these patients are shedding virus, I'm talking about now as a question mark. Hypothetically, if my gloves are working hard to be kind to each other and at the same time reach out to the community, and we're all in it for the long haul, and we're all in it together. The fires need the potential for misinformation and panic is that they possibly gasoline on a lit match. We've had three years to get primed with anxiety and anger. And I'm not saying that's right. I'm not saying that's wrong. I'm saying that's the world we've been living during the Trump presidency. And now, some sort of overdose from Mother Nature comes this. Pull it all together and you have an exact truly unprecedented in our lifetime. It will be very interesting to see what a city like ours is in society like ours—where we are blessed with great diversity, tremendous wealth, and also tremendous inequity, tremendous population of people—if we are able to really nurture what I think is the best of Los Angeles and to move forward from this just as diverse but stronger, just as creative but more resilient, more caring, more hopeful.

RELATED: If Ever There's Ever a City to Finance a Catastrophe, It's Los Angeles

Stay on top of the latest in L.A. food and culture. Sign up for our newsletters today.

FEATURES MAYOR ERIC GARCETTI CORONAVIRUS COVID-19 MAY 2020

Los Angeles Magazine

Subscribe to our Newsletter! Subscribe to our print issue!

Dining

Keeping Cool in L.A.: The Future of Fashion

Designers Gabriela Hearst and Rebecca Taylor on sustainable luxury, connecting to nature, and finding the meaning in loungewear

BY LOS ANGELES MAGAZINE DIGITAL TEAM 9 HOURS AGO

Arts + Entertainment

St. Vincent: Its Haute Night Owl

The rock star and style icon is front and center for her first Broadway show, Love, Love, Love, at the Hudson Theatre

BY CARI HAUSMAN 9 HOURS AGO

Dining & Food

Shake Shack Closing Five L.A. Locations Next Month

Melrose Place, Culver City, and Ventura Lake stores are on the chopping block

BY CHRIS MACHOLD 14 HOURS AGO

Dining

A Look Back at Okti Dog's Juicy Past

The Koreatown hot dog stand overcomes its location, weird health trends and right-wing politics to become a beloved L.A. institution

BY LINA LECARO AUG. 28, 2020

Arts + Entertainment

Major "Crime Tourism" Site Unveiled in Southern California

Visitors can now explore the scene of the crashing L.A. Times helicopter, Fatty Arbuckle's infamous party, and more

BY ANDREW CARNEY AUG. 28, 2020

Dining & Food

Bookstore Opening Today in Santa Monica Has a Legendary Past

Barnes & Noble's new location in Santa Monica takes over the space where Midnight Special Bookstore had been a beloved local institution for decades

BY CHRIS MACHOLD AUG. 28, 2020

Dining & Food

Italian American Museum Honors Singer Louis Prima at Exhibition

The new show showcases Prima's love of big music, the Las Vegas lounge act and "Disney's Jungle Book" character King Louie

BY CHRIS MACHOLD AUG. 28, 2020

Arts + Entertainment

Roller Skating Resurgence Brings Two New Rinks to L.A.

Retro Fitness Rollerdrome and Moxi Skate Lounge add to the list of pop-up roller rinks

BY CHRIS MACHOLD AUG. 27, 2020

See More

Enjoy,

The Los Angeles Magazine Team

© 2020
SITEMAP ABOUT US CONTACT US ADVERTISE PARTNERS PRIVACY POLICY TERMS OF USE

Powered by